Vanguard investigates the unknown. While doing so it also penetrates inside the Unknowable and communicates its findings to the main horde. Which, in turn, is not interested at all in the Unknowable. The horde is only interested in what is there to eat, of which one - lives.

The horde does not need the vanguard and it forgoes it by all means. The Great Khan needs explorers/crooks of the Walter Raleigh kind, who will announce that somewhere, in a strange world which needs to be colonized, there are mountains and rivers full of gold (Eldorado). The horde needs such knowledge that will move stupid masses to the wanted direction. A specific image is needed and not the story of the Formless.

Stochastic or Signalist relation to the system is that the system is something emerging and only currently exists as "final". System will not "be finished" someday. The system is as we see it at this moment - and as such we use it. The poet creates a cycle of poems, or a novel, using the stochastic method, not knowing in advance which actual words, and in what interrelation, he will use. All is uncertain to the very end. Nonetheless, the method that feeds exclusively on the intent not to predict, creates a new world that is momentarily seen with all the necessary "laws", which actually make it a world. This proves that the world does not become from a previous world, following the laws of conditioning. Therefore, there is no movement of the Spirit as History. There is no "progress" throughout history. Properly understood evolution, without an ideological superstructure, is just that. There is no "timeline".

this a response to your suggestion on facebook that i studied at the sf art institute.

maybe kinda sorta i do remember a thing or two besides nice view from the roof.

i remember one night a big party there bouncing around totally wired looking for brad damage who was supposedly there but i didn't find him.

and there was a cartoon you guys passed around about the same time as the o'hara/rivers manifesto with some art-damaged character and a thought-bubble with the words "grids grids grids grids".

A supposedly wise man I'll never see again said Hannah Arendt put an end to Kant's idea of meaning . His big things in the critique being seArch for meaning and search for truth. Or understanding there of ...(never could spend much time on it myself.) so all's left is what is true. Like art like science like politics. No I say. W/out certainty. Truth is.... language in itself is deeply problematic.
the problem is not so much a lack of meaning, as it is an excess of meanings.
as a poet, i take that as a given and use it to make work that i find interesting. use it to write the kind of poetry i want to read.
i'm interested in subjectivity. i'm interested in the experiential.
i'm not interested in nihilism, and i'm not interested in solipsism.
we can work with subjective, experiential truths in social settings, to create and sustain communities.

that's where the work is to be done.
we find the scale, the size, of community we can work with, and we work with it, work in it -- work on it.

i did a bunch of research in 92 - 93 on contemporary poetry, mainly in the small press and micro press networks. i had been writing a kind of deep image poetry for 15 years or so, influenced by the folks in the Naked Poetry anthologies, if you remember those. Merwin was a big influence, and Charles Simic, and John Berryman, who was really more of a confessional poet but somehow got mixed up with the deep image poets (second-generation deep image poets, at that - not Jerome Rothenberg, and Robert Kelly and David Antin). anyway, i was sick of all that by the early 90s. i think i had it down by about 78 or so, definitely by the time i started publishing in the 5 fingers review. i tortured myself getting it down, anguishing over syllable-counts, revising endlessly in search of the perfect word. the stuff i found in the early 90s owed a lot to the avant-gardes of the 20th century, particularly Dada and Lettrism, but also Fluxus and Neoism - and the serious "assault on culture" scenes like punk and Ed Sander's Fuck You, A Magazine of the Arts from NYC in the early 60s. that was what i was looking for. and the LANGUAGE Poets were still doing some great stuff too. so, i immersed myself in some different kinds of writing, and sort of forced myself to make a clean (or maybe not so clean, but fairly comprehensive) break with my past. i sat down on the floor in front of the woodstove in that house you visited out in the woods south of Charlottesville, and i piled up hundreds of pages of my writing on the floor beside me, and i read them and then threw them into the fire. that was that.all that anguish, the first 20 years of seriously writing, turned out to be practice. all that anguish in the cult of the perfect word turned out to have been the equivalent of playing etudes. so it goes. that was over 20 years ago. i've written a lot in the past 20 years, a whole lot, and i've enjoyed the process a lot more than i enjoyed it for the first 20 years.

ok, there you go. something like an explanation of my disdain...

Jim, How many books of Six Months...are there, and is it all available hard copy?
Thursday 6:11pm
i'm working on book 75 now. only the first 6 are available as print books. john bennett has been printing the pdfs.
So I could get them from him? I imagine it would be a hefty tome in paper.
each book is approximately 100 pages long, so, yeah, the whole thing is a good sized doorstop. john is just printing a copy for the archive, and maybe one for himself.
Thursday 7:55pm
Thanks. I'll ask John about PDFs.
i have the pdfs, and marco giovenale has posted/published all of them for download, here https://app.box.com/s/l76xlrg78e5s8evbi4c4

Friday 12:10pm
thanks for taking a look!
Oh, sure thing! I noticed Bennett had been name-checking you for a long time. Then I saw your stuff myself, so I wanna see more. I'm computer stupid. A foreign techie "destroyed" my PC, so now I have a full pad. I'm sure I could download at least one book after deleting some apps I rarely use.
john and i have been collaborating for 20 years. his LAFT was great. i had a lot of stuff in there.
Friday 2:38pm
Really? I was in a few myself, but was foolishly not writing regularly most of that time. JMB was the first fellow to publish me, in '78 I think. We've often talked about collaborating, but never did it for some reason. I met Ackerman, Sheila Murphy, Dan Raphael, and other quality people. Things seemed simpler then. I was in quite a few small press pulps. It was cool, but now you get instant feedback, for example.
Friday 10:59pm
meeting people in the writing community is great. i've been to a couple of john's symposiums at osu, and i've been involved in organizing some festivals here. i've met a lot of folks, including sheila (but not dan or al). john has been here 6 out of the last 7 years for the festivals). our son used to go to school in indianapolis. my wife and i dropped in on john and cathy a couple of times on the way back from taking him to school. that kind of stuff is important. the network has to be made of flesh and blood.
You must be near Chicago. Being from Detroit, I'm tied to Cleveland via Pere Ubu and other rock mutants. That's another cool story. I first dropped in unannounced on one of John's readings about '82 during an ice storm, declined his kind invite to an after party, saying I had to drive home over night. I wasn't on speed, but had a lot o' the Neal Cassady in me then. It's since dropped dead on some faraway railroad tracks. John & Catherine were gracious hosts many times during the '80s. My wife & I got hammered to damn near death at a combo July 4th/ Bennett Anniversary party. Fireworks are legal in Ohio & John loves blowing things up...you can imagine. I never met Ackerman. He was visiting someone in southern Michigan, far south of me. I had to decline the invite there because I had some weird animal flu. I met Lon Spiegelman and crew when we visited LA in '85. Lon's wife, Linda, was from Detroit. We got shamelessly wasted in the afternoon. Sadly, Linda died from cancer a few years later, and Lon dropped out of sight. Those are the only people I met - so far. I agree with you that the network should be "flesh and blood" on any level. I've collaborated with David Thomas Roberts and Jake Berry (I think), locally co-led a college class on Advanced Creative Writing using techniques I taught myself (I'm an autodidact who quit in the 10th grade; went back, and , using my BADASS GED points getting a H. S. diploma in '87. Shit, I wrote a book.). Unlike John or other people, I have no children who are unorthodox artists. Nor do I have a wife who reads a fucking thing I write. I once wrote about fucking an actress and she never even saw it. It was a big hit with a local folk singer...man, there I go. Later. Maybe cut-up or something? Take care.

Saturday 1:07am good stuff, thanks! i'm in virginia, roanoke. i edited and published a couple of magazines in the 90s and 00s - first juxta, and then xtant. experimental poetry, visual poetry, mail art. not a loose or as good as LAFT but operating in the same general territory. organized a bunch of events/exhibits here in roanoke from 08 through 11. now mostly just writing, and reading, which is what got me started and then into everything else. went to a little college in north carolina (guilford, a tiny quaker school in greensboro), dropped out, gradually, 2 years full time, then one part time, then another very part time, finally quit, gave away everyhtign i owned and moved to california (circa 78). wound up dropping out of sf state twice. so, i'm a serial drop out (tune-in, etc). if truth be known i'm an autodidact too. no writing classes, no studio art classes…

just now reading this https://jacket2.org/commentary/toward-poetry-poetics-americas-6-charles-bernstein%E2%80%99s-%E2%80%9Cour-americas-new-worlds-still-progr

In the collection of Mapuche poets, Elicura Chihuailaf writes that "Poetry does not merely safeguard the cultural identity of a people, it generates it." In this way, Chihuailaf emphasizes the productive forces of poetry in contrast to the reproductive reflexes of cultural theory. A poetics of the Americas would be less concerned with analyzing the themes and cultural narratives produced in Spanish and English fiction than in listening for – and composing – a collage of distinct language practices across the Americas. In replacing theme and system – "comparison" and "symbology" in Olson's terms -- with overlays, palimpsests, and collage, I am suggesting that we conceptualize our Americas as a hypertextual or syncretic constellation, with alphabetic, glyphic, and a/oral layers. A constellation is an alternative model for understanding what is often characterized as fragmentation, parataxis, isolation, insularity, atomization, and separate development. Hypertextuality maps a syncretic space that articulates points of contact and that potentiates both spatial connections among discrepant parts and temporal overlays that merge or melt into one another.

innaresting. sounds like exactly what we've been doing for a while now, eh?

on a somewhat related matter, I've been battling with the lack of a future tense for english verbs lately, makes it hard to do certain things i can do in spanish or french or even náhuatl (tho my náhuatl is quite limited) what does that lack of a future tense say about our culture? not that we can't talk about a future, which we can, but we have to do it in an awkward makeshift way.....

does it create a stronger emphasis on the future as a focus of attention? something outside, conceptually, of our in-the-present somatic existence? are we focused on illusions? delusions?

if it were simply another form of the verb, then wouldn't it be more a real part of what we are?

heh

Jim Leftwich <jimleftwich@gmail.com>

May 28 (8 days ago)
to John
our relationship, or lack thereof, to what gets theorized by folks like Bernstein is interesting in itself how is it that french and spanish have a future tense and english doesn't? i mean historically, do you know how this developed?

John Bennett

May 28 (8 days ago)
to me
no, i don;t know - tho i'm sure someone does, or has a good idea - altho answers to such questions are always a bit iffy, given the complex and very slippery way languages develop

Jim Leftwich <jimleftwich@gmail.com>

May 28 (8 days ago)
to John
i was thinking it should have come in with the rest of the french influence after 1066, but in any case, back to your original questions, it would be helpful if our understanding of the future had it as being contained within the present, as something like a facet or a variation, which might be accomplished if a future tense was simply another form of a verb.

John Bennett

May 28 (8 days ago)
to me
exactly! but then the attempt to express that thru other means - implication, sly hints, metaphor, whatever - can be interesting as well. Using "will" all the time for the future gets tiresome....

or, hell, just write it in spanish, like i do so often - spanish, or a form of it, will be the language of the near future in the US anyway

Jim Leftwich <jimleftwich@gmail.com>

May 28 (8 days ago)
to John
the permutation poems that i've been doing for a while are a kind of attempt at dealing with this set of questions one poem exists as if to say, ok, here i am, the present then the next poem exists to say the same thing except it also brings with it the previous poem which now also says, or said, here is the next poem, which i contain as one of many possible futures is saying in the new poem what it will have said, itself again, not to be confused with what it would have said which is now the collectivity of all of the other, abandoned possibilities it is a churning, and a swarming, sense of time if we - artificially, arbitrarily - make it stop, and step back, then it constellates the swarm(ing) stops as a constellation, a form i haven't tried writing this down before now i'm not sure i've quite conveyed it

John Bennett

May 28 (8 days ago)
to me
churning and swarming - that's it that's the sense of time i'm trying to get at, and looks like you're doing the same, yes a churning and a swarming is what the "self" is, after all

Jim Leftwich <jimleftwich@gmail.com>

May 29 (7 days ago)
to John
it does seem that that's what the self is, and a poem can come out of that, can be a kind of ambassador for that. in contrast to - even in opposition to - the conventional notion of "imposing order on chaos." the churning and swarming may not even be chaos, it may be a different order of organization - and a poem can bring that to one's attention in language.

John Bennett

May 29 (7 days ago)
to me
a different order - yes, that's it for sure i'm re-reading Burrough's cutup trilogy, in the new eds by Oliver Harris - and that is very very clear there

Jim Leftwich <jimleftwich@gmail.com>

May 30 (6 days ago)
to John
that quote from Burroughs - "when you cut into the present the future leaks out" - isn't nonsense. i think he meant it to be descriptive, observational. if you are looking at things in a certain way, that is exactly what happens.

John Bennett

May 30 (6 days ago)
to me
yes, and it's sort of a euro-cultural way of thinking about an idea he probably learned about from his studies of ancient Maya culture when he was at the Colegio de Mexico - in which time is circular, and the future has already happened, etc. WSB's way of expressing it still gives a slight nod to the linear concept of time, i think.

of course the Maya gave such a slight nod as well.....

Borges i think it was described time as a kind of spiral, circular but changing, in one or more of his stories. Having it both ways.

Jim Leftwich <jimleftwich@gmail.com>

May 30 (6 days ago)
to John

having it both ways actually seems right in this case. it's a little like themes and variations. history never really repeats itself, but it doesn't ever go away either.
the Burroughs quote is not that different from the basic idea of the I-Ching (as much as i remember of the I-Ching). the patterns are present.

from A NEOIST RESEARCH PROJECT, page 8

NEOIST CHAIR and CHAIR ACTION
A Neoist Chair is nothing else than any chair with a sign: NEOISM. The sign is nailed to a rod and the rod is fixed to the chair. Any chair or anything that can be used to sit on can be turned into a Neoist Chair. The sign makes the difference.
The first Neoist Chair Action took place on May 22nd, 1979, in Montreal, at the corner of Sherbrooke and McGill streets. It was called "Monty Cantsin sits for a portrait" and introduced Neoism and Monty Cantsin to passers-by and the rest of the world. People were invited to sit on the Neoist Chair and have their pictures taken to be exhibited later as Monty Cantsin portraits. A few hundred flyers of a manifesto "LOVE LETTER" were distributed to passers-by. The same manifesto has been also sent to correspondents all around the world. The event became known as the inaugural action of Neoism. The Neoist Chair Action has become part of the regular demonstrations of Neoist daily rituals, mostly used as a propaganda vehicle to question the origin and purpose of the noncepts of Neoism and Monty Cantsin. You can become a Neoist and Monty Cantsin simply by sitting on a Neoist Chair.

In the afternoon of May 22, 1979 Kantor sat down on a chair in front of McGill University with a sign that read “Neoism.” ”I called it the Neoist chair,” he says. That day, he quickly gained attention as a young artist starting something new. What would become the ever-evolving, anti-authoritarian art movement was born. The arts were changing from the hippie movement to the punk and new wave scene, and everything around him was in revolt. It was a rebellious time and the Cold War was leaving an apocalyptic feel in the air. It gave way for something innovative and transformative: Neoism. Georges Ribemont-Dessaignes (1920)
"However, the public's horror was a joy to behold. The Gaveau family, who attended the Festival, turned deathly pale at hearing the great organs, accustomed to Bach, resound to the rhythm of Le Pélican, a popular fox-trot. During an intermission some young people in the audience went to a butcher shop and bought some veal cutlets, which they later hurled at the performers. Tomatoes splashed down on a big cardboard funnel in which the author of these lines, executing a Danse frontière of his own invention, was hidden. But they also fell elsewhere, and one hit the post of a loge, splashing Mme Gaveau herself. This frenzy left more than one member of the public undecided: was this art, or was it real sacrilege at the expense of a heap of things that were really sacred? The various tones adopted by the press could hardly have enlightened anyone."

The Mazatecs say that the mushrooms speak. If you ask a shaman where his imagery comes from, he is likely to reply: I didn't say it, the mushrooms did. --Henry Munn he retired a few years ago but is still active with the archives when he was just beginning to acquire materials for it, in the late 90s, he wrote and asked me if i would donate something for it. at the time i was working in a tiny office/studio space about 75% of which was filled to the ceiling with boxes of manuscripts and small press publications. i wrote him back and said, sure, i'll donate some stuff, will you take a whole room full? because it's either that or rent a storage unit for it. he said send it on so i took it to a mailboxes etc and they packed it into 3 refrigerator boxes and shipped it to him. that was the first of several similar donations.

A hacked-up and re-slabbed mesh between Jim Leftwich's 2001 Useless Writing manifesto with the 1835 Preface to 'Mlle. de Maupin' by Théophile Gautier of the Jeunes-France:

Preface to A Useless Writing:

To begin with there is precious ,little use in our being on this earth .and living Skills are acquired behaviors .similar to acquired tastes, a book cannot be turned into gelatin soup. They are learned behaviors valued by the dominant culture to the extent that it can use them. Different comical traits, areas of the dominant culture value different .skills Skill is developed you will, originally, jump-started if through training, then honed, refined, through experience through ,practice the practice, of the particular .skill One sets out to learn a skill, seeks out an expert in the field rehabilitation ,the of virtue, and is trained by rote and through information until one has acquired the desired skill; he wears his hair of an apostolic length; It is the same whether one wishes to repair an automobile engine or write a sonnet an automatic syringe, elastic belts, crinoline collars, penitentiary literature, patent-nipple nursing-bottles, program a computer or paint a portrait ,Regnault's comfits, he composed dramas not a railway, they quoted ;his odes when he composed dramas they sent him back to his novels and ,recipes for toothache. Morality puts in a brief appearance in the somewhat bourgeois incarnation of Loyal the constable.

There is a hierarchy at work here and those who reside at the highest levels ,do so due to their possession of a specialized knowledge and their mastery of its requisite activities: the arcanum and its secret gestures: morgue literature, the gnosis and its rites. They prevent our really owning anything our ,having a book to our very self. Almost all of us can learn almost any skill if we desire .to do so So diminish the population of the globe that All that ,is required is, the desire and the work has ultra metas the desire and the willingness to put in the time and put forth the effort .to acquire the skill they are the utilitarian critics,—The forgetfulness of healthy ,doctrine essentially civilising and carry mankind along the road; Usefulness,—what is that word? All the skills that are taught, and the ways in which they are taught are ,structurally necessary to the culture that ,What is it applied to? What is the good of this book? else they would not ,be taught In what way can it be applied to the moral and physical improvement of we cannot be as primitive and patriarchal as they were in the Ark.

We should think of this usefulness as meaning ,only one thing: useful means useful to the dominant culture. always and only, nothing but rain and homilies our most numerous and poorest classes? But to barely keep from dying is not living, That which is deemed useful, they couple Robespierre and Jesus Christ became so jansenistically prurient in the jolliest way, is such only insofar as it reinforces the fundamental structure of the culture. The most useful place in a house is the shitter. Only in this way is progress .possible Any other is bitter delusion, The power relations that are structurally in place must remain structurally in place. Change is not only ,allowed it is required, but only in the details of the larger pattern; What matters it whether it is a sword, an aspergillum, or an umbrella that rules you? the larger pattern of necessity must remain intact. It is a stick just the same kind of club to be laid across their shoulders ,teaches them for our ultimate descendants Urge the proletariat to engender more inhabitants, and, when ,those swarm without reason to sweep them off the streets with artillery.

How comes it that men write verse and novels that lead to nothing which do not help ,on our generation on the road of the future? What happens if one desires to practice useless skills, skills that are not useful in maintaining the structure of the culture? First of all one will not be able to acquire these skills ,in the usual manner. There will be no teachers provided by the culture, who the new works of the Romantasemic school cause to shudder and shy that the classics; no training will be available. One’s desire will of necessity need ,be nearly an obsession. The work, the time and effort required, may seem disproportionate to the desire, I am not in the habit. One will likely decide to pursue some other skill of looking ,at certain parts of statues, to alter one’s desire, to attune one’s desire to those regarded as useful by the culture when it would be more progressive and far less costly to break it and to hurl the ,pieces away, fire cannon-balls at them instead of giving them bread.

What happens if one persists in the pursuit of useless skills? What excitement! What frenzy! It is unlikely that an entirely unforeseen activity will be invented ,so one will work in the shadows of an already established tradition, delirious jailer's literature. Next, any play or novel, pen, ink, paper, and a printer. But at least at the outset one, will work alone, without guides or guidelines. The wheel will likely be reinvented accidentally and often. (Reinventing the wheel is useful in the pursuit of ,useless skills. Charles Fourier has invented as many kinds of animal as the great naturalist) Our ignorance is pretty learned. Then, why talk of progress? But the wheel is not a part of the desire, so it will be discarded — discarded not as useless, a few of Saint-Simon's ideas, but as useful, therefore inappropriate to the pursuit. One trains by sorting and wandering, gathering and discarding, re-reading Pantagruel between the bottle and the pipe, always discarding. This is a nomadic pursuit, not necessarily directionless or circuitous, which enables me not to guess logogryphs and charades. the very pomps of Satan, but always everything but the steady step along a straight and narrow path. —like Sardanapalus, that great, misunderstood philosopher—This is the crooked path, and its passage is along the low road.

A large reward to him who should invent a new pleasure; This autodidact will learn to do things that others have no desire to do, that others are not allowed to do, what is useful to one man that others are not able to think of ,doing which I honour as highly as the profession of constitutional monarch. This is obvious from the outside looking in but only acknowledged by the dominant culture, the couplet of the adder, in moods of elitist condescension. Has a single additional mortal sin been invented? The normative reaction of the dominant culture will be derision or a haughty indifference. Structural superiority, however, permits itself the privilege of praising, especially to virtuous people, from a position of ignorance is of no use to the other. This is a method that attempts to appropriate the useless. A cursory glance at recent cultural history in America the most triumphant, the cobbler is far above the poet ,the most pyramidal, alone reveals several instances of this. He promises to develop new pleasures, and to develop the organs and senses. There is only one way around this: if one is truly committed to the practice of useless skills, one must be constantly on guard against one's own tendencies towards usefulness. Useful, virtuous and progressive: that cannibal, Charles X.

Three useless skills

1. private writing, by which I mean writing that has a strictly subjective significance for the ,writer this writing .a nightcap out of metonymy may be appropriated by the dominant culture, filthy literature, i.e. published, sold, archived, studied, etc, but it cannot be known for what it is. Books are the product of manners, not manners of books. To think one way and to write in another happens, imaginary plagiarisms, every day a writer's disciplined practice of private writing can only be known as such by that writer. other knowledge concerning it will never be other than. The ancillary author himself would have owned his book quite ridiculous.

2. After sanguinary literature, asemic writing, by which I mean writing that is shifted intentionally towards the unreadable towards ,image, others add, by way of final ingredient, without discarding entirely all vestiges of either the letter or the line, Messrs. Z., K., Y., V., Q., X., or some other letter of the alphabet between Alpha and Omega and without assuming the alternative status of visual art. Is not a pair of two seamless boots, is that when reading it is a hybrid writing, a writing not meant for a reading mingled with an imaging not meant for looking ,one is asleep instead of reading. The book which shall be praised is the book which has not yet been published. it is a useless, mutant writing, its uselessness a mutagen for the writer. He alone has been logical enough and bold enough to carry out the consequences to their ultimate end.

3. A witless prank ,It is unquestionably a great and lofty idea to turn to use movements which hitherto it has been sought to repress, sifting, brooding, drifting. And all because we are progressing.

Useless Writing

Skills are acquired behaviors, similar to acquired tastes. They are learned behaviors valued by the dominant culture to the extent that it can use them. Different areas of the dominant culture value different skills. Skill is developed originally, jump-started if you will, through training, then honed, refined, through experience, through practice, the practice of the particular skill. One sets out to learn a skill, seeks out an expert in the field, and is trained by rote and through information until one has acquired the desired skill. It is the same whether one wishes to repair an automobile engine or write a sonnet, program a computer or paint a portrait. There is a hierarchy at work here, and those who reside at the highest levels do so due to their possession of a specialized knowledge and their mastery of its requisite activities: the arcanum and its secret gestures: the gnosis and its rites. Almost all of us can learn almost any skill if we desire to do so. All that is required is the desire and the work, the desire and the willingness to put in the time and put forth the effort to acquire the skill. All the skills that are taught, and the ways in which they are taught, are structurally necessary to the culture that teaches them, else they would not be taught. We should think of this usefulness as meaning only one thing: useful means useful to the dominant culture, always and only. That which is deemed useful is such only insofar as it reinforces the fundamental structure of the culture. The power relations that are structurally in place must remain structurally in place. Change is not only allowed, it is required, but only in the details of the larger pattern; the larger pattern of necessity must remain intact.

What happens if one desires to practice useless skills, skills that are not useful in maintaining the structure of the culture? First of all, one will not be able to acquire these skills in the usual manner. There will be no teachers provided by the culture; no training will be available. One's desire will of necessity need be nearly an obsession. The work, the time and effort required, may seem disproportionate to the desire. One will likely decide to pursue some other skill, to alter one's desire, to attune one's desire to those regarded as useful by the culture.

What happens if one persists in the pursuit of useless skills? It is unlikely that an entirely unforeseen activity will be invented, so one will work in the shadows of an already established tradition. But, at least at the outset, one will work alone, without guides or guidelines. The wheel will likely be reinvented accidentally and often. (Reinventing the wheel is useful in the pursuit of useless skills.) But the wheel is not a part of the desire, so it will be discarded — discarded not as useless, but as useful, therefore inappropriate to the pursuit. One trains by sorting and wandering, sifting, brooding, drifting, gathering and discarding, always discarding. This is a nomadic pursuit, not necessarily directionless or circuitous, but always everything but the steady step along a straight and narrow path. This is the crooked path, and its passage is along the low road.

This autodidact will learn to do things that others have no desire to do, that others are not allowed to do, that others are not able to think of doing. This is obvious from the outside looking in, but only acknowledged by the dominant culture in moods of elitist condescension.
